I have been buying hamburgers from Paul's just over Tom Ugly's Bridge in "the shire" over approximately a 40 year time span.

In that time, only 2 families have owned the business and the quality of product has never faltered, even when the business changed hands some 10(?) years ago. The little hamburger shop is an institution in the shire but the word has spread with many favorable reviews in various publications over the years

In my opinion, they are the best hamburgers in Sydney. Freshly prepared off the production line of family and friends, made from premium ingredients, you are always in for a treat. And the chips are also some of the best I have tasted. Crisp and golden, never soggy.

In summer particularly, loyal fans come from miles away and the line of customers often stretches around the street. However, so efficient is the family production line that you never wait more than 5 minutes.

Congratulations to Paul's on a successful 50 year anniversary. I hope you will be around for a long time.
